

e. Perseverance of the Saints

"Here again we have a necessary implication of what has previously been said. If God has unconditionally elected to save a people, and if He has provided atonement which makes their salvation certain, it follows by inevitable logic that those whom God has elected to eternal salvation will go on to eternal salvation. in other words, a denial of the doctrine of the perseverance of the saints is a denial of the sovereign grace of God in unconditional election." (p. 145)

Buswell's view of the "five points" is exactly the same as that of the Articles of Faith of the Canons of the Synod of Dordt and that of the Westminster Confession. Buswell's view is therefore that of evangelical Reformed Theology.
